

THERE was not so much buncombe and hush in that cry of "negro domination" after all, as subsequent events show. Gov. Bradley has appointed a negro named John Postell as Steward of the Western Lunatic Asylum at Hopkinsville. The man is a resident of that city and a saloon-keeper by trade. For his services as an election striker he is rewarded with a good paying position, which places him upon a social equality with the white officials of that institution, and gives him authority over the five or six hundred white inmates. Just what tenderness and mercy will be dispensed
